The Northwestern Lehigh football team heads into the 2024 season after reaching last year's state championship game.

Tigers look to build own identity

BY MIKE HAINES

mhaines@tnonline.com

Fans and the media still want to talk about Northwestern's run to the state title game last year.

Tiger head coach Josh Snyder, while proud of that team and all it accomplished, doesn't want live in the past.

"I'm anxious for this season to start just to turn that page completely," Snyder said. "It was a special group, but we've got to be fair to this group. It's their time now. It's their time to find their identity."

"We're going to be a different football team that's just as explosive, that's just as capable of making a run. It's just about doing it and finding your identity, digging deep, taking one game at time and finding out who your leaders are as the season goes."

Snyder knows who at least a few of the leaders are who will take over that role from graduates Dalton Clymer, Blaine Snyder, Devon Hildebrand, Daniel Jenkins and Ben Walters.

Several key players are back from last year's team, which graduated just five seniors, including four offensive starters and five on defense.

The Tigers are bringing back quarterbacks on both sides of the ball. Junior Shane Leh is back under center, while safety Eli Zimmerman will be the QB of this year's defense.

Leh threw for 1,816 yards and 24 touchdowns last season, while running for another 466 yards and nine scores.

"Shane is going to be really good this year," said Josh Snyder. "He had a great year as a sophomore starting 16 games. The big difference between last year and this year is his feel for the offense. He's on the same page with me. The playbook is wide open."

"He knows where guys need to get lined up. He's extremely accurate. His feel and grasp of the offense is really good. I think he's up for a really good year."

On the other side of the ball the Tigers have three all-state players returning.

Zimmerman, an all-state defensive back in 2023, set a Colonial League record with 10 interceptions. He also made 39 solo tackles, 24 assisted stops and recovered a pair of fumbles.

"He's a special player back there," said Snyder. "He's our quarterback of the defense. He always gets us into the right coverage and the right position."

"He has a real knack for reading the quarterback and really driving on the ball. And he can go get it. He high-points the ball and out-efforts the offensive guys for the football. He's a ball hawk."

Zimmerman is an explosive punt returner who averaged 15.2 yards per return and took one for a touchdown last season. He'll also be the Tigers' starting running back this year after rushing for 499 yards and six scores last year.

The Tigers need to make up for the graduation of Clymer, who rushed for 1,930 yards last year. His 291 carries led the team by 229, as Leh's 63 were second on the team, followed by Zimmerman at 52 totes.

With the strength of this year's offensive line, the Tigers expect to be able to run the ball effec-

Reichard, a two-way player who made 32 solo tackles, 54 assisted stops and a team-high 10 sacks last year, will anchor the line on both sides of the ball. Reichard also made nine tackles for loss in 2023 when he earned all-state recognition as a linebacker.

Another leader on the defensive front will be nose guard Jackson Huber, who had 16 solo tackles, 40 assisted tackles and three sacks last season.

"One of those two-gap nose guards," Snyder said of Huber. "He can get double-teamed without being driven and at the same

Northwestern must replace its all-time leading scorer with the graduation of Matt Johnson.

Northwestern will miss Johnson's speed

BY CHUCK HIXSON
Special to the press

After winning a state championship in 2022, anything short of that was going to be a disappointment for the Northwestern Lehigh boys soccer team in 2023.

The Tigers made a deep run in states, but were unable to capture another state crown last season.

This season, the bar is no lower than it was last year as the Tigers shoot for a state title. Even with graduation changing the roster, the team has enough tools to make its quest reasonable.

Top scorer and playmaker Matt Johnson graduated as did Isaac Frey, Zach Grim, Nick Krum and Tim Zellner.

Several players with a lot of varsity experience remain and will provide head coach Nate Hunsicker with leadership on the field for the team.

"Obviously, the big loss is Matt Johnson," said Hunsicker. "He impacted the way we played because we were able to just play that through ball to him and he would use his speed to beat defenders and make things happen."

"We have guys who are similar to having that ability, but I think we are going to have to play a little bit differently and really possess the ball. We have always stressed that, but now we will have to do that even more and really emphasize possession. One thing we have going for us is that teams aren't going to have that one guy to defend and we have five or six guys who can find the back of the net, so if they all chip in, we will be in good shape."

Senior Jack Mauro is one of the players with similar skills and showed that he had the speed and agility to work around defenders last season. With Johnson's exit, Mauro will likely see more scoring opportunities and will be looked upon to be an offensive force. Mauro also has developed leadership skills much like

Johnson and is respected by his teammates to take leadership on the field.

"Having had the opportunity to watch other seniors and juniors step up into that leadership role has helped me to be one of the leaders and now take that next step as one of the team leaders," said Mauro.

The Tiger field hockey team comes into the 2024 season as defending District 11 champions.

Olympics inspire Tiger field hockey team

BY CHUCK HIXSON
special to the press

While women's field hockey is not one of the highly-viewed sports at the Olympic Games, many members of the Northwestern team tuned in and watched Team USA and local player Meredith Sholder.

The team won just one game and did not advance out of pool play, but there was still a lot to learn for the younger players watching. It's also encouraging that nine of the players on the US Olympic team are from Pennsylvania.

"I noticed the speed with their foot work and their stick skills," said Northwestern Lehigh senior Olivia Costa. "Their feet are so fast, and the stick skills are just the blink of an eye. It's amazing to see how they use their speed and develop plays with their quickness."

While the Lady Tigers may not generate any future Olympians, they do hope to generate local excitement and work their way deeper into states this season.

Last season, Palmerston knocked off Northwestern to win the Colonial League Championship, but the Tigers came back to take District 11 gold by beating Palmerton.

The two teams figure to battle for supremacy again this season and Northwestern is hoping not to share the two championships.

The two teams' field hockey rivalry has been growing and the they get to see each other often because of the way the schedules fall.

There are two regular season meetings and then another likely meeting in the Colonial League playoffs before potentially another in districts.

A final meeting has not yet taken place in states, but it could happen that the two teams meet there as well.

While those meetings are always highlights on the schedule, Northwestern head coach Lisa Opolsky knows that there are a lot of other games to be played, many of which are against strong teams, so she takes a longer view when it comes to looking at the season.

"We really embrace the idea that our season is a marathon as well. See HOCKEY on Page 5 opposed to a sprint,” said Opolsky. “We are going to lose during the season, and I often say during those games that I would rather lose now than lose in the postseason so we can turn those lessons into something productive by the end. That’s what we were able to do last season.”

HOCKEY

One of the things that the Tigers have going for them is the combination of speed and the ability to show toughness both offensively and defensively.

They also have a roster that has eight seniors and 11 juniors who are battle-tested.

The team went through one of its more vigorous offseason schedules that put it up against powerhouse schools like Emmaus and other state champion-caliber teams.

That experience combines with the team’s leadership from upperclassmen to give the Tigers a lot of confidence coming into the season.

“The physical part of the game allows you an upper hand if you can do it well and do it with reason,” said Opolsky. “We train to be physical and to play low and work through things and we want to add that to our bag of tricks and be able to pull it out when we need it.”

Senior Cara Thomas has been able to adapt to the physicality of the game by using some of the skills she has learned on the basketball court.

“I’ve learned to use those skills from doing things like boxing out and in the circle, I’ll just kind of back into play-ers and I think it helps,” said Thomas. “I like to go out and play as fast and as hard as I can and I’m more of an aggressive person, so it comes naturally to me.”

Goalie Emma Yanders graduated, but junior Ryan Smolinsky got some playing time last season to give her a taste of the speed of varsity play and what it takes to win.

“We have to play with intensity every time out,” said senior Ella Dangelo. “It’s all about team goals for this season, we always focus on that, but it feels like we are especially focused. We have good leadership and have worked hard to get ready for this season.”

The Northwestern girls soccer team is looking to make another deep postseason run after reaching last year's state semifinals.

Girls soccer reached new heights in 2023

BY CHUCK HIXSON
special to the press

The Northwestern Lehigh girls soccer team reached new heights last season when it ventured to the state semifinals for the first time in the program's history.

While the Tigers graduated some good players, there is still enough talent to give optimism that the program could take a deeper step this season as it pursues more than just gold medals from the Colonial League and District 11 championships.

The 17-1 season in 2023 ended with a loss to Central Columbia. The two teams will match up against each other during the regular season just as they did last season, when Northwestern won the regular season meeting and Central Columbia took the postseason match.

Team leader Cammie Fitch is now at Lafayette and Katie Brensinger, Jayden Gillette and Abby Pomajevich are also gone from last season's roster.

Brook Balliet, Paige Bissell, Syenna Flores, Olivia Spatz, and Sydney Wright are seniors this season and give the Tigers strong leadership on the field. Balliet and Bissell have become a potent combination up front with Bissell getting 12 assists last season, helping Balliet to score 21 goals.

"We had something to prove after not getting the league title the year before," said Northwestern head coach Jordan Smith. "So that was our first goal for last season was to get that league championship back in New Tripoli. Then we got through districts and finally made it through the state quarterfinals and into the semis, but we're not happy with just doing that again."

While Northwestern produces strong offense, the strength of the team has been the defense.

Smith is entering his fourth season as coach and in his first three seasons the team played a total of 73 games and allowed just 36 goals or less than a half of a goal per game.

Flores and Spatz continued the success last season on the Tigers defense and they're optimistic that this year's team will be able to play to the same standards that the team has held the past three seasons.

"We're not just there to defend the goal and get the ball out," said Flores. "We're taught to defend and then take the ball out of the back and help to build the foundation as we move the ball up the field."

Junior Olivia Reinhart took over in goal last season for Naomi Glassberg and picked up right where she left off. Thanks to input from Glassberg, Reinhart has shown herself to be one of the better goalies in the Colonial League.

"One of the things that she (Glassberg) always stressed was to keep things disciplined back there and to work with the back line," said Reinhart. "I have tried to keep that approach and keep things disciplined so that we don't have any miscommunication or give up easy goals."

The Northwestern girls volleyball team nearly made last year's Colonial League playoffs and will have a better chance this season as twice as many teams will reach the league tournament.

Tigers must replace first all-state player

BY CHUCK HIXSON
Special to the press

Last season, the up-and-coming Northwestern Lehigh volleyball team fell just short of qualifying for the Colonial League playoffs, with Notre Dame gaining the final spot based on power rankings.

This season, the Lady Tigers are more experienced and have a strong roster that can challenge for a spot even though they suffered some losses because of graduation. With the addition of Leighton and Jim Thorpe to the Colonial League, the playoffs will expand from two teams to four, giving Northwestern even more reason to believe it won't be left out in the cold again.

"Each year I expect us to keep getting better," said Northwestern head coach Mike Maston. "We're not going to go from zero to 100 in a year, but we're progressing every year, and I think this year is going to be the best squad we have put on the floor so far."

Kylie Nagle served as the team's libero last season and became the first Northwestern Lehigh player to make the all-state team, but has moved on to college, leaving a hole to be filled. The team also lost seniors Danielle Dengler, Megan Holman and Mikayla Turner to graduation.

Northwestern had a strong run at the playoffs last season even though it endured some injuries throughout the year.

Those injuries provided opportunities for young players to step up, which they did. It also provided them with the opportunity to gain varsity experience which will likely pay dividends this season for the Tigers.

"We always like to get young players on the court in practice and in games whenever we can," said Maston. "So that was an opportunity last year and they performed well for us, so we know what they can do and they're going to be stronger this season because of that experience."

Boys XC returns top two

mhaines@tnonline.com

This year's Northwestern Lehigh boys cross country team will look a lot like last year's version, especially at the top of the line up.

Seniors Xander Giandomenico and Greyson Wellings return to the top two spots in the line, while just two runners graduated from the team's top seven.

At a preseason time trial, Giandomenico and Wellings led the pack.

"Xander and Greyson ran together and then we had about a minute gap and others started coming in," said head coach Chris Stitzel, who enters his 26th season after crossing the 900-career win mark last season. "If we can get them in a pack with our 3-4-5-6, then we should be OK."

Giandomenico returns after finishing ninth in last year's Colonial League Championships and 20th at districts. Wellings was a 16th-place finisher at leagues and in District 11. He missed qualifying for states by one place.

Also returning from last year's team, which finished 19-5 and in third place in the Colonial League, are sophomore Brady Furman (23rd at leagues last season), junior Jonathan Fornauf (33rd at leagues last season), seniors Bryce and Luke Thrash, who finished 40th and 41st, respectively, at last year's league meet.

Newcomer Noah Griffith was fourth in the boys team's recent time trial and is expected to be in the team's top five and could eventually lead the pack behind Wellings and Giandomenico.

Northwestern needs to re-

Keeping your top athletes healthy for the postseason is always a main focus for high school cross country teams.

It will be imperative this season for Tiger head coach Chris Stitzel, who heads into his 26th season.

"We only have eight girls this year," he said. "We're not deep. We have to stay healthy, but I think we have a good chance at districts again."

"I have most of the team back from last year plus I gained Rosie Nester from the middle school team. She's going to be my number one right now."

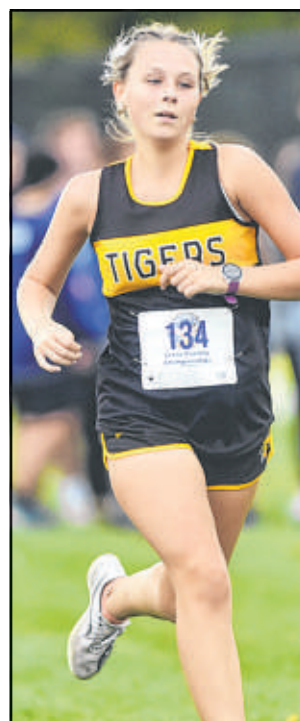

Northwestern returns last year's top runner in senior Sophia Cornell, who finished ninth at last year's Colonial League Championships and qualified for states with a seventh-place finish at districts.

Also back from last year are seniors Kellcey Pedron (20th at leagues; 23rd at districts last season), Megan Fornwalt (20th leagues; 70th districts) and Devon Heinly (38th leagues; 20th districts); sophomore Amber Carl (45th leagues); and junior Ava Smedstad (47th leagues; 45th districts).

Nester, a freshman, took second place in last year's Colonial League

Middle School Championships, and will likely take over for graduate Haley DuBois as the Tigers' top runner this fall.

Katie Griffith also graduated from last year's top six.

Returning to the team after a year away from cross country is senior Sophia Penny, who finished 19th at districts as a sophomore in 2020.

"We're hoping for big things," said Stitzel, who has won more than 900 dual meets overall and more than 500 in his career with the girls team. "Having Rosie as our number one will help."

While Notre Dame and Southern Lehigh will likely retain the top two places in the Colonial League this season, the Tigers are looking to be the next-best team in the league. The Tigers have hopes of taking one of the top two places as a team at District 11 Class 2A meet, when the Crusaders move down to Class A and the Spartans move up to 3A.

through the midfield has returning players Logan Mesics and Caelan Stangil with Jake Van Lierop playing both midfield and forward for Northwestern this season.

The defensive unit figures to return to strength with Brandon Krapf back for his second season as the team's starting goalie. Juniors Austin Bittenbender and Isaiah Lynch will take over at the outside back positions on defense with a couple of returning players to provide guidance.

"Nate (Kinzel) did a really good job of mentoring those guys over the summer and they played really well. We went unbeaten in the summer league and they were able to grow and adapt to the varsity style of play," said Hunsicker. "We have guys like Ben Bachman, who played well this summer, and we are able to bounce him between the midfield and defense and he works really hard, and he'll definitely be another person to fill that void."

While the summer season was a success, the team struggled to stay healthy. Younger players had an opportunity to contribute, but getting a good look at what figures to be the 2024 team was difficult for the coaching staff to do.

"Developing chemistry is going to be big because we didn't play one whole match this summer at full strength," said Hunsicker. "Hopefully, we will be at full strength [when the fall season begins]. We have a couple injuries, but we hope to get them back for the season."

Last season's Tigers reached the PIAA quarterfinals and Hunsicker believes that if they had been able to get past Camp Hill in that game, they would have had a favorable path to win back-to-back titles.

The task for this season is to get the team to develop chemistry and adapt to a slightly different style of play offensively.

The Northwestern Lehigh golf team took second place in District 11 Class 2A last season.

Golf team must fill holes after 10-3 season

With three key players missing from last year's District 11 runner-up team, the Northwestern Lehigh golf team has some holes to fill if it is to repeat last year's successful 10-3 campaign.

Graduated are Erik Mather, Ethan Koslows-ki and Stone Sosnovik. The trio was often carded the team's top three scores in matches last season.

This year the Tigers return just two seniors, but also have a couple experienced juniors back.

Three of Northwestern's most experienced players this season are girls players in senior Addison Remaley and juniors Avri Chandler and Gracie Scheffler.

Chandler took fourth place at last year's District 11 Championships, while Scheffler placed fifth.

Also returning for Northwester is sophomore Cole Dynda, who was the Tigers' top player at districts last fall. He shot 87 in the event at the Steel Club. Because he didn't qualify for the tournament individually, Dynda's score last year only counted toward his team's total. Had he been part of the individual tournament he would have finished in a tie for fifth place.

Senior Caden Monahan also returns to this year's team, while newcomers Trent Coll (sophomore) and Skyler Kern (freshman) are also expected to help the team this season.

"Our returning letterman will form a great nucleus for the team," said head coach Tim Miller, who heads into his 14th season at the helm. "With a full season of tournament golf behind them, I believe they are poised to lead us to a winning record."

time make plays going up and down the line.”

Thanks to winning by the mercy rule in eight games last season, a lot of Northwestern players saw playing time on a team that went 15-1 and didn't lose until the state final.

“We've got a lot of guys back with a lot of experience,” said Snyder. “You look at the mercy-rule games, the non-starters probably played four or five full games last season. So that's a ton of experience.”

One area that will be a question mark heading into the season, and maybe for a few weeks early-on, is the Tiger line-backing corps.

Three of Northwestern's five graduates were starting linebackers. They accounted for more than 300 tackles last year, with inside linebackers Clymer (52 solo, 79 assisted) and Blaine Snyder (50 solo, 82) leading the team and Hildebrand (29 solo, 38 assisted) making an impact on the outside.

Junior Shane Hulmes is the top returning tackler for the Tigers and one of the team's three returning all-state players. He will return to his middle linebacking spot. As a sophomore he made 50 solo stops and 66 assisted tackles last year. He also forced a team-high three fumbles, made seven tackles for loss and tallied 3.5 sacks.

Josh Snyder has a good idea who three of the four players are who will join Hulmes at the position, but the situation could remain fluid for a few weeks.

Two-way lineman Bryer Reichard (55) returns after earning all-state recognition at defensive end last fall.

“We can't just reach into a hat and pull out three all-league linebackers,” he said. “It's going to be a work in progress. The scrimmage is going to be really important. Even as the season rolls on that could be a work in progress.”

Position Breakdown QUARTERBACKS

Junior Shane Leh returns as the starter after a stellar season. He'll have a better grasp of the offense this year, allowing the Tigers to open up the playbook a bit more. Behind him will be capable back up Mason Bollinger.

RUNNING BACKS

Eli Zimmerman will get the bulk of the Tigers' carries, while Seth Kern will also be in the mix. A short-yardage back could also emerge to take some of the load from Zimmerman, a two-way player and special teams standout who will be on the field for nearly every meaningful snap this season.

RECEIVERS

Bollinger and Landen Matson were a big part of last year's receiving corps. They'll be joined this year by Kern and possibly sophomore Michael Legowy. Josh Wambold and Shane Hulmes will play tight end.

OFFENSIVE LINE

DEFENSIVE LINE

Reichard is coming off an all-state season at end. Nose guard Jackson Huber is the team's top returning tackler. Meck, Ethan Steigerwalt, Wambold, Bailey and Popp are all candidates to take over at the other end position.

LINEBACKERS

Two Tigers linebackers return, while three graduates need to be replaced. All-stater Hulmes returns in the middle. Matson is back on the outside. Bollinger and Wambold are likely to earn two of the open spots, with Braxton Lakatos, Brendan Miller, Evan Wagstaff and Michael Boring in the mix to earn a linebacker position.

DEFENSIVE BACKS

Zimmerman, an all-state safety last season, returns with Seth Kern coming back on one corner back position and the other still undetermined heading into the team's scrimmage last week.

both had impressive freshman seasons, to develop into a role with the offense.

The chemistry among the group has been contagious and with more development time over the summer, the Northwestern offense figures to give opposing goalies fits.

“Our chemistry and communication up top has been really important and we had two freshmen (Schaffer and Yezik) come on and play well for us last year,” said Balliet. “We have some speed that allows us to work around defenses and give-and-go to each other and that allows us to do a lot.”

“We actually had three or four freshman players who got a lot of time on the field,” said Smith. “That gives them the experience that we can carry into this season.”

The Tigers have a tough early schedule with three games in four days against Fleetwood, Central Columbia and Blue Mountain.

“That’s going to show us how good we are and what we need to improve on and then we’ll go from there and get better week to week,” said Smith. “We have a difficult Colonial League and a really difficult 2A class in districts, so we just have to battle and earn our way back to states.”

Green is already the program’s all-time leader in assists and spent the offseason at 999 total assists, leaving her just shy of becoming the first Northwestern player to tally 1,000 assists in her career.

Green and fellow senior Norah Silfies provide leadership for the team and a sense of pride for Maston as they were among the first group of players that he selected for the team in his first season as coach.

“I think it’s a big accomplishment and I am really excited to reach 1,000,” said Green.

Coming into her senior season, Silfies is looking for continued success for the team and an increased role as a team leader for herself.

“I think I’m looking forward to being one of the leaders to help this team this season,” said Silfies. “We have a good team and the young girls seem like they’ll be able to help us.”

While the Tigers did not make it to leagues last season, they did qualify for districts.

They struggled in the district opener against Pottsville and had an early exit. Even though the loss hurt, it gave players the experience of playing in districts to give them something to build on for this season.

“We struggled in our first match in districts, but we can get back there,” said Maston. “I’ve been told that this is really my team now since these seniors are the first group of players that I picked for the team, so the building process is going to a new level now.”

Junior Leagh Nagle returns for Northwestern as one of the players who gained experience with the team last season and will see more time on the court in 2024. Freshmen Jessie Unrath and Kayla Schaffer have been working with Green to develop their setting skills and could find themselves getting varsity time on the court with Northwestern Lehigh this season.
